

A transition to Language Coach

Interview with Gabriela Brugalli Müller, language teacher, Brazil

“It was really transforming. It’s a whole new way of guiding people to discover a new language.”

Can you describe your professional career before taking the language coaching certification (LCC)?

I’ve always been passionate about teaching, but I confess that teaching grammar got a bit wearing sometimes.

How did you find the course?

It was really transforming. It’s a whole new way of guiding people to discover a new language.

Which highlights or insights did you gain from the LCC?

To stop finishing my students’ sentences all the time and be a better listener.

What was the immediate impact on your way of teaching after taking the course?

I became a better listener and learnt a new way of presenting grammar.

“I definitely see them more motivated and aware of their learning processes”

Were there any impacts on your personal life during or after the course?

I guess I became a better observer.

How would you describe your professional development after the course?

I’m still practicing, but I already feel the impact of the new approach on my coachees.

How has the course changed the way you deliver a language course?

I stopped being a teacher and started being a language coach.

How would you describe the impact you are now having as a language coach on your learners?

I definitely see them more motivated and aware of their learning processes.
